Year in Review

As I reflect on 2001, I continue to be amazed at the progress and growth here at the foundation. Over the course of last year, we gave over $1 billion in grants in support of more than 2,050 grantees. The pages that follow are just a snapshot of the incredible work our grantees and partners are doing each day to improve equity and access in health and learning. Some of the exciting highlights include:

- The Global Health program has accelerated critical research, development and testing of new products aimed at combating diseases that kill and disable millions in the developing world. For example, last year our grantees advanced the development of a vaccine for malaria and a microbicide that will help women protect themselves from HIV.
- The Education program is working to dramatically improve high school and college graduation rates for all students, especially those who have historically been underserved. We now are partnering with more than 30 districts across the country to create small, rigorous high schools where all students can achieve and be prepared for college, work and citizenship.
- The Library program is more than halfway toward achieving our goal of expanding access to information and technology so that if you can reach a public library in the U.S. you can reach the Internet. At the end of 2001, our dedicated team of library trainers had installed 30,000 computers, from the Yukon Territory to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific.
- The Pacific Northwest Giving program has given us the opportunity to be good neighbors by supporting some of the excellent work going on right here in our backyard. In 2001, we helped launch the Sound Families Initiative, an innovative partnership that has funded more than 200 new transitional housing units throughout Pierce, King and Snohomish counties.

We face a unique time of opportunity. The tragic events of Sept. 11 and the ongoing challenge to ensure a healthy world for our children, reinforce the urgency of what we do, from improving health among the world's poorest, to increasing educational opportunities for America's disadvantaged students, to opening doors to the benefits of the information age. Today ensuring equity and access to the unprecedented possibilities of the new century is more relevant than ever.

Global Health

Sharing advances in health with the global community.

Highlights

The foundation’s Global Health program strives to increase global health equity in developing countries by supporting alliances and organizations working in infectious disease prevention, vaccine research and development, and reproductive and child health.

- By the end of 2001, The Vaccine Fund had committed more than $800 million to government programs in 53 developing countries to provide immunizations for children
- The Malaria Vaccine Initiative and GlaxoSmithKline formed an alliance to fast track the development and testing of the only malaria vaccine candidate yet to show effectiveness in preventing malaria. Currently malaria kills over 2 million people each year, mostly children under age five.
- The International AIDS Vaccine Initiative (IAVI) helped accelerate the testing of AIDS vaccines in Africa, Thailand, and the U.K., and focused global attention on the urgent need for an effective and equitably distributed vaccine.
- The Global Microbicide Project was launched to expedite the development of microbicides that are contraceptive and enable women to protect themselves against HIV infection and other sexually transmitted diseases.
- The Averting Maternal Death & Disability Program completed its second year initiating over 50 projects to improve the availability and quality of emergency obstetric care for women in nearly 40 countries.
- In 2001, the Alliance for Cervical Cancer Prevention evaluated cost-effective screening methods for low-resource settings and improved delivery of cervical cancer prevention services for 70,000 women in sub-Saharan Africa, Latin America, and South Asia.

Education

Creating opportunities so all students can achieve.

Highlights

The foundation's Education program seeks to address the current inequities in preparation for and access to college for all students by supporting the creation of small, rigorous high schools and reducing the financial barriers to higher education.

- Principals and superintendents in all 50 states received grants to support improved technology and leadership training through the foundation's State Challenge Grants for Leadership Development.
- The Washington State Achievers Program was launched, helping 16 Washington state high schools transform themselves into small, personalized learning environments and providing low-income students at those schools with four-year college scholarships.
- The foundation joined with Carnegie Corporation to support seven urban school districts around the country as they work to transform their high schools into smaller, more personalized schools. The foundation is now working with more than 30 districts across the country to create small high schools where all students can achieve and leave prepared for college, work, or citizenship.
- The Gates Millennium Scholars program, administered by the United Negro College Fund, helped 1,000 minority students pursue their higher education ambitions last year.

Libraries

Increasing access to information, especially for low-income communities.

Highlights

The foundation's Libraries program is moving toward the day where every person, regardless of income, education or geographic location, can get free public access to digital information and computer technology

- Last year, more than 6,100 computers were provided to 1,700 libraries, bringing the number of states with Internet access and trained librarians up to 21.
- The U.S. Library Program provided 16 states with training grants totaling more than $1.7 million to support the states' own technology training programs.
- All 110 Navajo Nation chapters received computers and training, bringing the first public access computing stations to many of these remote communities.
- In Canada, over 4,000 computers were installed benefiting 1,466 libraries in 13 Canadian provinces and territories.
- The foundation launched a program in Chile to leverage local resources and provide public access computers with Internet access in 368 libraries.

Pacific Northwest Giving

Seeking to improve the lives of people in our community.

Highlights

While much of the foundation's work happens across the globe, the Pacific Northwest Giving program supports organizations in Washington and Oregon that address the needs of vulnerable families and their children.

- More than 200 new transitional housing units were funded through the Sound Families Initiative, along with critical support services such as job training, substance abuse counseling, and child care services. Sound Families is a $40 million commitment to find solutions to homelessness in the Puget Sound region.
- Last year, the foundation provided more than $36.5 million to 155 non-profit organizations in Washington and Oregon serving children and families in need.
- The Community Access to Technology program made grants to 21 organizations, serving rural communities, youth programs, the homeless, and persons with disabilities in more than 64 locations throughout Washington state.
